

Charles Cochrane
Director of Cochrane Adams Fine Art Agents

Bio

Cochrane Adams Fine Art Agents advise and act as agents for owners and collectors of all forms of fine and decorative art, as well as for their trustees, fiduciaries, family offices and professional advisers. We provide impartial and expert advice on selling and buying works of art, and on all aspects of management and planning relating to it. We are completely independent. We do not hold stock and are not dealers, and are not tied to any auction house or method of sale. We are free to choose the best course of action for our clients and our advice is always impartial, unflinching and honest.

Charles has been an international fine art agent for over fifteen years setting up his own business nearly ten years ago. He obtained his degree from Durham University and practised as a solicitor in private client law and international finance at Linklaters in London. In 1998 he left the law for 3 years to obtain a Fine Art BA in sculpture and history of art from Central St Martins. He is a member of several professional bodies including The Worshipful Company of Arts Scholars and The Heritage Group of Professional Advisors.
